

This bachelor's thesis, Connection between the Work of the Social Therapy Workshops and Interests of the Society, pursues current attitude of the Czech majority society to the people with mental disability and their opportunity to integrate. It describes the social service of Social Therapy Workshop and the influence of a direction of social-work therapy on the level of participation of users on the life of the majority society. It points to facilitate the integration efforts in the case of concentration of Social Therapy Workshop attention to users and also to the society. In the research-part the thesis compares the interests of users and customers in an example of two activities of social-work therapy - a café and a bakery. After that it shows, which strategies use the employees of the Social Therapy Workshop, so that they reach the fulfilment of customers, or rather the inhabitants of that locality. The research-part also describes benefits of the social-work therapy for the people with a mental disability, for customers of the café and for a local community. The local community gets in touch with these people more naturally and meetings with them becomes a more pleasant experience. My thesis draws a conclusion, that there are opportunities to connection of the work of Social Therapy Workshop and the fulfilment of society's interest. The result of this connection is facilitation of integration the users of this social service into the majority society.
